To Whom It May Concern:

Section 177 of the Election Act requires the financial agent of a nomination contestant to establish a separate account in a savings institution in order to ensure that all money received by or on behalf of the nomination contestant is deposited into the account and that all expenditures are paid from the account.

For the purpose of this section, the definition of a nomination contestant is an individual who seeks nomination as a candidate representing a registered political party, whether or not any other individual seeks that nomination. This means there may be multiple nomination contestants from the same political party in the same electoral district and they must all open a contest account to deposit and pay for all related transactions, even before they file any documents with Elections BC.

Elections BC encourages potential nomination contestants to open contest accounts as early as possible in their campaign to ensure that all financial transactions go through the account as required by the Election Act.

If you have questions regarding the financing requirements in the Election Act for nomination contestants, please contact Provincial Electoral Finance at 1-800-661-8683 or by email at electoral.finance@elections.bc.ca.
